Lead Your First Virtual Retreat Checklist

Design the Teleclass/Webinar
<ul> <li>☐ What is your why for yourself and your retreat?</li> <li>☐ What is the transformation you envision for your attendees?</li> <li>☐ Envision your ideal retreat attendee.</li> <li>☐ Choose you topic/intention</li> <li>☐ How many sessions/calls will your retreat have? (length)</li> <li>☐ What three key questions/activities will you share?</li> </ul>
Prepare for the Teleclass/Webinar  Prepare a flexible outline of intentions (versus an inflexible agenda)  Decide which media best shares your message and transformation (audio, video?)  Select & register for the conference line/media aligned with your message & skill level (with enough time to practice)  Choose your headset (USB or mobile-phone-type, in the ear or over the head)  Price and package your retreat (with reference to retreat length & offerings)  Create a brief retreat description & (working) title (for invites)  Create path to receive registrations, confirmations, and payments (if applicable, e.g., email, webpage, social media)  Invite (at least) 5 key people (for your 1st or practice retreat)
<ul> <li>Leading the Teleclass/Webinar - Leadership Mastery</li> <li>☐ Remember focus is transformation over information</li> <li>☐ Teach, as if, to one person at a time (intimate communication make people feel special)</li> <li>☐ Listen more than speak (use all six senses, be with the attendees)</li> <li>☐ Plant seeds that will sprout later (related to retreat practice &amp; your business vision)</li> <li>☐ Pace is fast enough to keep people's attention, but slow enough to sustain feeling</li> <li>☐ Students feel heard versus talked to</li> </ul>
Advanced Skills  Paint a picture of the environment with visual image Make it playful & use humor wisely Help students to share themselves Use metaphors, similes and analogies Don't seek to get your emotional needs met by leading tele-classes Balance voice volume & tone for ambiance & recording
Post Teleclass/Webinar (web-retreat)  Create community & keep retreat alive Create wisdom from event notes & activities, and share with attendees
